

#	Team	Ted	Bryan	Jacob
1	Tampa Bay Buccaneers	Jameis Winston (Florida State), QB The Bucs were the third worst team in total offense and had the second most interceptions in the league (as a team). Last year they managed to draft rookie of the year finalist wide out Mike Evans. Now they need a QB and Winston has the best skill set of any QB in the draft.	Jameis Winston (Florida State), QB This pick is almost a lock as Tampa Bay needs a franchise quarterback, and Winston has the most potential in this draft class to fill that need. The Buc's coaching staff and front office reportedly prefers Winston over Mariota, the other top quarterback in the 2015 draft. As long as Winston can stay out of trouble off the field, he should be a force to be reckon with in a weak NFC South division.	Jameis Winston (Florida State), QB Freeman? No. Glennon? Nope. McCown? Ouch."Famous" Jameis is the new franchise QB in Tampa, and I doubt he could be any worse than those other three. Great arm, pro-style offense in college, 6-4. If he can stay alright off-the-field, Winston is a star in the making.
2	Tennessee Titans	Leonard Williams (USC), DE According to NFL.com, Williams has the highest grade of all the prospects in the draft. That being said, Tennessee was horrendous last year defensively giving up an average of 373 yards a game. So they just can't go wrong with adding a potential star to	Leonard Williams (USC), DE The Titans will most likely be selecting the best player available in the number two slot in this draft, making Williams their pick. The former Trojan will complete an under-the-radar defense in Tennessee, along with offseason acquisition Brian Orakpo. The Titans seem to like last	Marcus Mariota (Oregon), QB The team in Nashville lacks talent, period. The most talented playmaker in this year's draft is Marcus Mariota. He has a gun and could use his legs to start something up.

		their D-line.	year's second round pick Zach Mettenberger as their starting quarterback over any other option in this draft.
3	Jacksonville Jaguars	Vic Beasley (Clemson), DE/OLB One of the best all in all edge rushers in the draft, Beasley has great size and speed for his position. Combine that with his ability to explode and he can be a nightmare to offenses. Jacksonville needs defensive help and Beasley would be a great start.	Dante Fowler (Florida), OLB The Jaguars cannot go wrong with this selection of Dante Fowler. Fowler would be a key part of a much-needed improved pass rush for Jacksonville. Just as the Titans, the Jaguars seem content with their incumbent at the quarterback position, the third overall pick of the 2014 draft, Blake Bortles, so they will stay away from quarterbacks this early.	Amari Cooper (Alabama), WR Just like the Titans, the Jaguars lack talent. Blake Bortles is going to need some help to progress and Cooper's the guy. Amari's resume includes a 6-1 stature and a ridiculous catch early last year versus Mississippi State last year.
4	Oakland Raiders	Amari Cooper (Alabama), WR Cooper is one of the most highly anticipated young receivers in this year's draft. Oakland could really use a wide receiver to compliment Derek Carr, who will be going into his second season. He has a vital ability to win battles downfield and has	Kevin White (West Virginia), WR The Raiders finally have a franchise quarterback in David Carr, but now they need play-makers. White is the top receiver in this draft class, and will ultimately be a top-7 pick. White had an outstanding combine, further	Leonard Williams (USC), DE Young, tough California kid Williams gets to stay in the Golden State with Oakland. Obviously size is not an issue (6-5, 302) for the 20 year old. Maturity might be an issue for the 20 year old, but a d-line with him and stud OLB

		star potential.	helping his draft stock.	Khalil Mack is chilling just thinking about.
5	Washington Redskins	Dante Fowler (Florida), OLB The Redskins defense gave up 27.4 points per game (tied for third worst in the NFL with Tennessee) and could really use any defensive help they can get. Fowler is a quality pass rusher with great size and agility. For the Redskins, Fowler could be a strong and safe start to fixing their defense.	Vic Beasley (Clemson), DE/OLB Just as White, Vic Beasley had a terrific NFL combine catching the eye of many top scouts. Without Brian Orakpo, the Redskins could really use an extra edge-rusher to go along with Ryan Kerrigan. As seen in recent years, NFC East quarterbacks struggle under pressure from opposing defensive lines, making Beasley a perfect fit for Washington.	Dante Fowler (Florida), OLB The Redskins need some help. So why not draft a talented 3-4 DE, like Fowler. A quick 40 (4.6) will help him drag down the likes of Romo, Manning, and Bradford next year.
6	New York Jets	Trade New York Jets trade 6th overall pick to the Cleveland Browns in exchange for Browns' 12th, 19th, 147th overall picks in draft. Cleveland Browns: Marcus Mariota (Oregon), QB Well, trade rumors are flying throughout the NFL world and the buzz is that the Browns are close	Marcus Mariota (Oregon), QB If Marcus Mariota slips to sixth overall, he will not get past the Jets. New York has been searching for a franchise quarterback since the Chad Pennington days, and Mariota can fit that bill. Though some scouts question his NFL capabilities, he was extremely successful at the	Brandon Scherff (Iowa), OL Let's give Geno a chance, right? Scherff could solidify an already good line to help the Jets become New York's premier team. Some new pick-ups by the front office this offseason give Gang Green fans some hope for 2015.

		to the top of the list of teams looking to trade up for Mariota. Mariota is quick and his great ability to create offensive opportunities outside of the pocket could really help him in the NFL. He shouldn't have it too hard in Cleveland considering his competition for the starting job would be Manziel and Hoyer.	University of Oregon, winning the 2014 Heisman Trophy. With the additions of Brandon Marshall and Darrelle Revis, the Jets are a top quarterback away from becoming a threat in the AFC.
7	Chicago Bears	Kevin White (West Virginia), WR This offseason the Bears traded star wide receiver Brandon Marshall to the Jets. Of course they still have threats with Alshon Jeffery and Martellus Bennett, but they can definitely use another receiver for the recently declining Cutler to hopefully bounce him back on track. Along with that, White is just plain talented. He has great hands and a ton of athletic ability which make up for a dearth of speed.	Amari Cooper (Alabama), WR The Bears are in need of a big wide receiver to go along with Alshon Jeffery in the wake of the trade of Brandon Marshall to the Jets. Amari Cooper was a consensus top pick coming into this draft as a potential number one wide out, and will undoubtedly help the declining Jay Cutler.	Kevin White (West Virginia), WR Alshon Jeffery is going to need some assistance holding the load with Brandon Marshall gone. White is quick (4.35 40) and is naturally good (6-3). His great hands and a Jay Cutler with the stats of a couple years ago, Chicago could give Rodgers and Stafford's teams a run for the NFC North.

8	Atlanta Falcons	Shane Ray (Missouri), DE/OLB Ray displays a ton of heart every time he steps on the field. With that it's also hard to find many shortcomings with this kid on the field. Ray is a skilled pass rusher with great athleticism. Though the Falcons are in dire need of a DE for the future and Ray has a ton of potential. Though recently there was concern about his toe, the Falcons are rebuilding and getting Ray even if it requires some time is worth the potential outcome.	Shane Ray (Missouri), DE/OLB Shane Ray has the size and athleticism to become a future Pro-Bowler. The Falcons need to improve their defensive front, and they can by selecting the 2014 SEC Defensive Player of the Year. Ray can join Jonathan Babineaux, Stansly Maponga and Tyson Soliai in head coach and defensive specialist Dan Quinn's defensive.	Vic Beasley (Clemson), LB The Falcons are pretty much set, outside of putting some pressure on the opposing QB's. Atlanta's prayers for Osi Umenyiora did not pan out, so some fresh legs off the edge would be great. Beasley included great quickness and strength and could become one of the best edge rushers in the league.
9	New York Giants	Brandon Scherff (Iowa), OL The Giants managed to grab rookie of the year Odell Beckham Jr. in the 2014 draft. Well now, they have a big need for an offensive line man in hopes of building an o-line that may one day protect Eli Manning. Scherff is enormous; he is a whopping 6'5" and 320 pounds.	Brandon Scherff (Iowa), OL The Giants need help on their offensive line. Scherff projects to be an above-average run blocker, which New York has not had on their offensive line for the past few years. He will undoubtedly strengthen their offense.	Shane Ray (Missouri), DE/OLB Ray is the fourth best edge rusher in this year's draft and he may just be New York's best option. DE is not the Giant's biggest need, but if Scherff is unavailable, adding Ray on the other side of Jason Pierre-Paul would be pretty fun to watch on Sundays.

		At offensive guard he can be a good start to putting together an offensive line that Eli can trust.
10	St. Louis Rams	Todd Gurley (Georgia), RB          Though many mock drafts will have Gurley going in the 20's, the Rams have a need at the running back position. They got some solid numbers out of rookie Tre Mason, but he is all the Rams have at the position. Stacy and Cunningham are unreliable. Though he has potential to be the best RB in the league, he only played 40% of his team's offensive snaps over the last three seasons and the Rams will have to beware the risk.	DeVante Parker (Louisville), WR          This pick for the Rams is just a "best available" selection. Parker will line up on the other side as Tavon Austin, and at 6'3", he will be a perfect complement to St. Louis' 2013 first-rounder. The Rams could use as many weapons as they can get for newly-acquired quarterback Nick Foles.	DeVante Parker (Louisville), WR          The Rams just haven't been the same since Kurt Warner's "Greatest Show on Turf" teams; but now that could all change thanks to some help from GM Lee Snead and the front office. Parker is the perfect complement to QB Nick Foles, who should make full use of Parker's 6-3 body.
11	Minnesota Vikings	Trae Waynes (Michigan State), CB          The Vikings biggest draft need (arguably) is at the corner back position. Waynes is fast and his confidence is through the roof. However, scouts have said his	Trae Waynes (Michigan State), CB          The Vikings biggest need coming into this draft is top-notch corner back, especially with the great talent at the receiver position in the NFC North (Calvin Johnson,	La'el Collins (LSU), OT          With Adrian Peterson's future in Minnesota up in the air, Collins could help push the d-line for the next RB in the Gopher State. Collins is a bully up front and might as well be moved to

		technique could use some work and others think he may be too physical with receivers at the NFL level. However, he is the best corner in the draft and the Vikings could really use someone with his skill and untapped potential.	Randall Cobb, Alshon Jeffrey). At 6'1", scouts say Waynes is a "bump-and-run cornerback with the length, deep speed and confidence to handle himself down the field against speed." (Lance Zierlein of NFL.com).	guard, but he is the Vike's safest pick.
12	Cleveland Browns	New York Jets (via trade): Devante Parker (Louisville), WR Well trading down in this case is a great move by Mike Mac in his first year as the Jets GM. Why draft Parker? Well Ill quote an NFL scout via NFL.com, "Parker won't the NFL Scouting Combine, but he will win when the ball is in the air." Parker has some of the best hands in the draft and his yard per catch at Louisville was beyond incredible. He would be a compliment to Decker, Kerley, and newly acquired Brandon Marshall. With proper guidance, Parker can find his	Danny Shelton (Washington), NT Cleveland truly needs help on the defensive front, making Shelton a good selection here. Shelton is known as an above-average interior pass rusher, which would be extremely useful for the Browns in a division with three quality quarterbacks at center of the Bengals, Ravens, and Steelers.	Danny Shelton (Washington), NT Obviously with the number 12 pick the Browns won't be able to snag Leonard Williams, but he is the next best option. DT is the Browns' biggest hole and if Shelton could keep his weight (339) down, he can fit in nicely. way to Canton someday.

13	New Orleans Saints	Bud Dupree (Kentucky), OLB An explosive pass-rusher like Dupree is exactly what this Saints team can really use to maybe pick this defense up as the Saints defense has struggled of late. NFL scouts have compared him to Patriots LB Jamie Collins and he certainly has the potential to be just as good or even better.	Bud Dupree (Kentucky), OLB The Saints have a history selecting former basketball players (Jimmy Graham), and Dupree (former all-state player in high school) could be next in line. Here, the Saints will take the best available player, which in this case is Dupree. An explosive edge-setter, Dupree will join, an otherwise, weak defense.	Randy Gregory (Nebraska), OLB The Saints are an old team with a depleting defense. Gregory has a 34" reach and runs a 4.6 40, so motor is not a question with the Nebraska pass-rusher. Team's biggest concern with Gregory is his positive test for Marijuana at the Combine in February.
14	Miami Dolphins	Andrus Peat (Stanford), OT The Dolphins are in need of an offensive tackle and a giant like Peat could be part of their offensive line next year. He is a good run blocker and also an above average pass blocker. He will require the proper coaching but he has the potential to be a quality NFL offensive tackle.	T.J. Clemmings (Pittsburgh), OT Clemmings, another former high school basketball stand-out, has a long and athletic, tight-end-like body. The Dolphins desperately need help on the offensive line to protect the oft-sacked Ryan Tannehill.	Breshad Perriman (Central Florida), WR Miami has definitely made a bang this offseason, signing Ndamokung Suh to a boatload of money and recently, Greg Jennings/ Another and younger WR that could help Miami's weak position is Perriman out of UCF. He is 6-2 212 and amazingly runs a 4.25 40. His downside is his drops, but if HC Joe Philibin can help him, he could be a poor man's

				Mike Wallace.
15	San Francisco 49ers	Arik Armstead (Oregon), DT Well after a particularly tough offseason thus far for the 49ers, they have been left in a desperate need of defense. They need someone who they can potentially count on in the future. Armstead is 6'8" and is said to have the traits needed to become a great run stopping defensive lineman.	Jalen Collins (LSU), CB San Francisco lost two corners this offseason in Chris Culliver and Perrish Cox, creating a massive hole at this position. Collins is the number two ranked cornerback in this draft class, according to NFL.com. He has the size and speed to become a top cornerback in the NFL.	Trae Waynes (Michigan State), CB After a disappointing season, the Niners cleaned house and lost Chris Culliver and Perrish Cox. Waynes runs a 4.31 and might be the best corner in the draft. MSU's defensive scheme pretty much handed Waynes a 1-on-1 all game, so if the Niners can't find a number 2 guy, it won't be the end of the world.
16	Houston Texans	T.J. Clemmings (Pittsburgh), OT Houston lost Andre Johnson to free agency and they still have Ryan Mallett as their starting quarterback. With that, they still have star running back Arian Foster but nobody real star offensive tackle with the right coaching. NFL scouts have compared him to current Texans lineman Duane Brown.	Andrus Peat (Stanford), OT Another team that needs help on the offensive line is the Texans. Peat is huge and powerful tackle standing at 6'7". According to scouts, he is one of the most NFL-game ready players in this draft.	Dorial Green-Beckham (Missouri), WR Even last season, Andre Johnson was the only decent WR on the Texans' offense and now with him off to Indy, things could get a little complicated. With the top 3 WR's in the class likely gone, Houston will have to settle with DGB, who did not play last season due to legal issues. He's 6-5 with great speed (4.49 40) and great hands. DGB was arrested for pot at Missouri so character may be an issue.

17	San Diego Chargers	Danny Shelton (Washington), NT Shelton is being compared by scouts to Vince Wilfork. He's 339 pounds but has a surprising athletic ability to his game. The Chargers don't really have a huge need for any specific position and getting a lower risk/higher reward guy is the right pick for them here.	Ereck Flowers (Miami), OT The Chargers brutally need offensive line help to protect Phillip Rivers. Rivers has been one of the most sacked quarterbacks over the past few years. At 6'6", 324 pounds, Flowers has the size and talent to be a good tackle in the NFL.	Melvin Gordon (Wisconsin), RB Phillip Rivers' future in San Diego is questionable, so a star is going to be needed. With oft-injured RB Ryan Mathews gone to Philly, SD needs a starter now. Gurley is the better back of the future, but his newly repaired ACL is in question.
18	Kansas City Chiefs	Kevin Johnson (Wake Forest), CB The Chiefs have a strong defense outside of the corner back position. They aren't awful at the position but they could be a lot better. Johnson is athletic and very competitive but lacks the weight of an average NFL cornerback. However, his man coverage ability along with all his other traits give him a great chance to be a starting cornerback soon after he arrives in the NFL.	La'el Collins (LSU), OT The run on offensive tackles continues. Chiefs head coach Andy Reid has notably taken offensive lineman very early in the draft, and this year should be no different. Just as Rivers, Alex Smith was sacked at a very high rate in 2014. Collins, or any other top offensive tackle, at this pick would be beneficial for Kansas City.	Cameron Erving (Florida State), C The Chiefs need a WR, period; but 18 overall is not the spot to find one. KC lost C Rodney Hudson to Oakland and therefore C is a weak spot. Erving protected the likely number 1 pick, Winston, and now has the opportunity to protect the 2005 #1 overall pick, Alex Smith.
19	Cleveland Browns	New York Jets (Via trade): Randy Gregory	Breshad Perriman (Central Florida), WR	Andrus Peat (Stanford), OT Cleveland already

		(Nebraska), OLB At 6'6", 240 pounds, Gregory is huge for an outside linebacker and that combined with his toughness could make him one of the best OLB in the NFL one day. However, he will require a tough and patient coach due to the worries scouts have about his attitude and off the field problems. Well worth the risk for new head coach Todd Bowles.	With star receiver Josh Gordon in and out of trouble, the Browns really need another target for second-year quarterback Johnny Manziel. Perriman has the size and speed that can make him a great option for Manziel and the Browns.	possesses one of the best O-lines in the league with Pro-Bowlers Alex Mack and Joe Thomas. Now if Peat is available whoever starts at QB could feel safe about his right side, too. He is 6-7 313 and has quick feet. With Peat added to the line, the Browns could be real playoff contenders.
20	Philadelphia Eagles	Landon Collins (Alabama), S Collins is known for an aggressive style of play. He is a great run stopper who can help the Eagles defense with his speed and ability to make tackles. If any team in the first round is shopping a safety, he should be the first one off the board.	Arik Armstead (Oregon), DT Eagles head coach Chip Kelly loves having Oregon-alumnus on his team. Armstead is another former Duck that Kelly would love to have at his disposal. The Eagles could always use more help on the defensive front, especially a guy that fits into Kelly's system.	Landon Collins (Alabama), S The Eagles made a bang this offseason with signing of Demarco Murray, but chose to address their safety problem in the Draft. Collins is a big (228) safety and is very eager to get down to the line and make a play. Don't be surprised to see the fines racked up for dirty hits throughout his career.
21	Cincinnati Bengals	Jalen Collins (LSU), CB Collins is one of the most talented	Landon Collins (Alabama), S The Bengals could use safety help on	Devin Funchess (Michigan), WR The Bengals are one of the NFL's

		cornerbacks in the draft. However, scouts worry about his technique and say it's he still has work to do. He still has a high ceiling due to his great instincts and his ability to play the ball on short and long plays.	the other side of Reggie Nelson. Collins played a lot of strong safety at Alabama, which would fill Cincinnati's need. Collins is good with defending the run, but has to improve his pass defense while in coverage.	most disappointing teams in the past with 5 consecutive losses in the postseason. With a top-5 WR in AJ Green already, adding an athletic beast like Funchess (6-4, 232), can make a formidable WR group.
22	Pittsburgh Steelers	Marcus Peters (Washington), CB Peters is skilled with decent size and ball skills. He also has a ton of confidence which is becoming more and more of a trait that NFL teams are looking for. Scouts on NFL.com said called Peters talent 'raw' but also said he is far from polished. The downside, Peters has a lot of discipline and maturity issues which could hold him back. It may take some patience but if Tomlin is up for the challenge he could make Peters into a quality NFL corner.	Randy Gregory (Nebraska), OLB Gregory has the talent to be a top-10 pick in this draft, though character issues have made him slip to here. The Steelers need younger pass rushers on the defensive front, and with their first class organization, Gregory's off-the-field issues would not become a huge problem.	Kevin Johnson (Wake Forest), CB The Steel-City already includes one of the best CB crews in the league, but adding a young prospect in Johnson can add to that. He won't be a star in 2015, but with some work with Mike Tomlin, Kevin Johnson can be one of the best all-around CB's.
23	Detroit Lions	Eddie Goldman (Florida State), DT After losing Suh and Mosley the	Melvin Gordon (Wisconsin), RB Gordon had a historic 2014	Malcom Brown (Texas), DT Detroit lost the two most-feared

		Lions could definitely go after a young defensive tackle with hopes of turning them into another Suh. Goldman has pro-bowl potential with a 6'4", 314 pound build. He was great with Florida State and could be just as great in the NFL.	season for the Badgers, heavily lifting his draft stock. As a very talented open-field runner and receiver out of the backfield, Gordon could be a quality replacement for Reggie Bush, who left Detroit in free agency.	DT's in the league in Suh and Fairley, and have only added a troublesome Haloti Ngata. Malcolm Brown is great at clogging up holes and some work on pass-rushing can make him a great replacement for Suh.
24	Arizona Cardinals	Eli Harold (Virginia), OLB Despite having a solid secondary, Arizona is in serious need of both inside and outside linebackers. Harold has been labeled 'explosive' at the position and has deadly size with the potential to be a dual threat linebacker.	Todd Gurley (Georgia), RB Gurley is one of the most talented players in this draft, though his college career was derailed with injuries. Still, he could be a great selection for the Cardinals who are in desperate need of an above-average running back.	Bud Dupree (Kentucky), OLB After unfortunate injuries at the close of the season, the Cardinals were bounced early in the playoffs. Now if the Cardinals can boost a pretty old front 5 with the speedy (4.5 40) Dupree, they can turn into real contenders next year.
25	Carolina Panthers	La'el Collins (LSU), OT Collins is a giant, but it's said he lacks the athleticism to be a left tackle. He could still be a great offensive lineman but expect to see him moved to right tackle or one of the guard spots.	D.J. Humphries (Florida), OT The Panthers' biggest need is arguably at the tackle position. Protecting Cam Newton is even more essential as it ever was during his young career, coming off the serious back injuries he suffered in a December car	D.J. Humphries (Florida), OT The Panthers have a gaping hole on the right side of the o-line, and hobbling QB Cam Newton agrees. Humphries is a tank that can help the former Auburn Tiger excel. Humphries faced some of the best competition in a defense-heavy

			accident. Humphries has the athleticism to become an elite blind-side protector.	SEC.
26	Baltimore Ravens	D.J. Humphries (Florida), OT Just about equal in size with Collins, Humphries could be a bid edition to a competitive Ravens team, but only after a lot of work and coaching. He has the potential to be a quality left tackle at the NFL level.	Dorial Green-Beckham (Missouri), WR The Ravens lost star receiver Torrey Smith to the 49ers during free agency, while Steve Smith is not getting any younger. This puts Baltimore in a position where they basically must acquire a top, young receiver for Joe Flacco. Green-Beckham is 6'6", a long-strider, with speed and good hands.	Marcus Peters (Washington), CB Baltimore's secondary was exploited last year against Brady and the Pats in the playoffs and adding an NFL-ready Peters could be a huge win for the Ravens. Peters, who was dismissed from UW's football team last season, has some character issues. If he can grow up Marcus Peters is a name to remember.
27	Dallas Cowboys	Bernardrick McKinney (Mississippi State), ILB The Cowboys are basically all set on offense but still lack a lot of defensive talent. McKinney has size that is noticeably above the average size of an inside linebacker and he has the potential to be an above average player but scouts say he lacks talent that makes a linebacker a star.	Kevin Johnson (Wake Forest), CB The Cowboys desperately need help at the cornerback position as former first rounder Morris Claiborne has been a huge disappointment. Dallas could chose to take the best available here, as they have no other glaring holes on their roster, though Johnson seems to fit best.	Byron Jones (Connecticut), CB Dallas is a team that is built to win now. Secondary, and the refs, is the biggest concern on "America's Team." Byron Jones has just recently shot up on Mock Drafts and has some star potential.

28	Denver Broncos	Malcom Brown (Texas), DT The Broncos aging defensive line can use some new blood and Brown would be a good start. Scouts say he has quick hands and that could help him a lot in the NFL against the larger offensive lineman.	Eli Harold (Virginia), OLB This could be Peyton Manning's final year, making this a must-win season in Denver. The Broncos could use help at the linebacker position, but just as the Cowboys in the previous selection, could take the best player available.	T.J. Clemmings (Pittsburgh), OT Denver is always a contender for the Super Bowl with Peyton Manning, but Manning's injury history and injury potential is a huge liability. That's why a big guy like Clemmings could be key to protect the future Hall-of-Famer.
29	Indianapolis Colts	Ereck Flowers (Miami), OT Well, the offensive tackles are having a good first round and it's yet to end. Flowers is 6'6", and is said to have the same talent to be a great left tackle. He still will require some work but he can be well worth the reward.	Tevin Coleman (Indiana), RB Coleman would be a hometown pick for the Colts, as he played college football for the Hoosiers at the University of Indiana. The Colts have not had a consistent running back since Joseph Addai. Coleman could join Ahmad Bradshaw and Vic Ballard as a very good backfield at Andrew Luck's disposal	Eli Harold (Virginia), OLB The Colts' edge rushers are worth starting every Sunday, but for Sundays in the future, Harold could be the guy.
30	Green Bay Packers	Carl Davis (Iowa), DT The Packers have some need on the defensive line and Carl Davis should be high on their list. Scouts credit Davis with having the weight, length, and height to be a first round	Malcom Brown (Texas), DT The Packers already have B.J. Raji on the interior, but adding Malcom Brown makes their defensive front even scarier. Those two could	Jalen Collins (LSU), CB Green Bay is going to need some help defensively. With the losses of both Tramon Williams and Davon House the Packers could restock on NFL-ready corners with

		prospect. He has had some trouble with his pass rush ability which has brought him down.	help eliminate the running game of Green Bay's oppositions. The Packers always draft very well, so any pick they make here will improve their team.	Collins. Green Bay will have to ignore the recent reports of multiple drug tests at LSU to snag this type of talent.
31	New Orleans Saints	Ronald Darby (Florida State), CB Darby only has average size but makes up for it with his blazing speed. Scouts have shown concern for his toughness but again he makes up for this with his athleticism and instincts. Overall he has the ability to be a starter for this Saints team.	Bryce Petty (Baylor), QB NFL evaluators feel that Petty needs a year or two on the sidelines to become a quality talent in the league. This is the perfect opportunity. Drew Brees has one year left on his contract, and what better a mentor for Petty than Brees. Petty has the "size, leadership and intangibles" (Lance Zierlein of NFL.com) to become an above-average quarterback in the NFL.	Nelson Agholor (USC), WR The Saints are not very talented in the pass-catching area. Agholor is great at running routes and could be a huge help to Drew Brees.
32	New England Patriots	Melvin Gordon (Wisconsin), RB The Patriots lost Ridley to free agency. They can't stay too confident with Blount and Gray, they need some young talent to come in and get things done.	Jordan Phillips (Oklahoma), NT The Super Bowl champs lost one of their key pieces Vince Wilfork to the Texas during the offseason. Wilfork was one of the best run stoppers in the	Eddie Goldman (Florida State), DT The Super Bowl Champs lost a huge amount of talent in the offseason, but 32 is about where all the apparent talent is gone. Goldman is lighter,

		Gordon was a monster last year with Wisconsin and he would be even better with Tom Brady thanks to his pass catching ability.	NFL during his time in New England, and Phillips can be a nice replacement for Wilfork.	but could be a poor-man's Vince Wilfork.
--	--	---	---	--